ABSTRACT

Information is provided on nearly 500 short-term professional development programs offered in the United States that are open to or intended for non-U.S. students. The programs, which range from 2 weeks to 1 year in length, require at least an associate's degree or a corresponding level of academic or nonacademic study for admission. The programs are arranged alphabetically by 23 major fields of study, with general programs listed first, followed by subfields. The fields are: agriculture; architecture; area ad ethnic studies; business communications; computer sciences; education; engineering; home economics; industrial arts and trades; languages and literatures; law; liberal arts and general studies; library and information sciences; life sciences; mathematics; medicine and health services; philosophy and religion; physical sciences; psychology; psychiatry and psychotherapy; public administration; social sciences; and visual and performing arts. Within each section, the programs are listed alphabetically by the names of sponsoring institutions. For each program, information is provided on: sponsor's name, program title, subjects and unique program features, beginning and ending dates or duration of sessions, location of instruction, methods of instruction, eligibility, cost, availability of scholarships, type of housing offered, application deadlines, contact persons, program numbers, and program highlights. Indexes are offered for sponsoring institutions, states, and fields of study. Appended is a list of 120 professional associations, with addresses, that conduct 1-day or 2-day workshops and seminars or continuing education programs. (SW)

The Institute of International Education (IIE) is the largest U.S. higher educational exchange agency. A nonprofit organization with over 500 U.S. college and university members, IIE has provided information on educational exchange to higher education and the public for over 65 years.

USIA Fulbright Program. IIE assists the U.S. Information Agency (USIA) in the administration of the U.S. Government's Fulbright Program of grants for graduate study in the United States. Citizens of other nations interested in applying for Fulbright awards can obtain information about eligibility and applications from the binational commissions and advising centers in their countries. Grantees are nominated by the binational commissions or U.S. Information Service (USIS) posts in their home countries, not by IIE. In most countries, application should be made 14–18 months before the beginning of the academic year for which a grant is sought.

IIE Offices. IIE educational advising services are offered by information centers maintained by the Institute in Bangkok, Thailand; Guangzhou, China; Hong Kong; and Mexico City. U.S. offices are located in New York; Washington, D.C.; Atlanta; Chicago; Denver; Houston; and San Francisco. For further information, contact the Communications Division at IIE's central office in New York City.

INTRODUCTION

Specialized Study Options U.S.A. 1986-88 is the successor to two earlier IIE directories to short-term training in the United States, Specialized Study Options U.S.A. 1984-86 and Summer Learning Options 1983-85. Preliminary discussions with U.S. Information Service (USIS) educational advisers overseas revealed that data on more advanced training would be particularly helpful to them. In planning the new edition, then, IIE determined that a two-volume division based on academic prerequisites would be more appropriate to their needs than the previous seasonal arrangement.

Accordingly, the 1986-88 edition of Specialized Study Options is divided into Volume I, Technical Education, which lists programs that require only a high school diploma as a prerequisite for enrollment, and Volume II, Professional Development, which describes more advanced programs—those requiring at least an associate's degree or a corresponding level of academic or nonacademic study for admission.

These volumes include programs in nearly every field of study available at colleges and technical schools in the United States, with business and technical subjects most heavily represented. Both books, however, contain a wide variety of interdisciplinary programs which were frequently difficult to categorize for placement in an appropriate section. For this reason, a field of study index has been added to each volume.

Inclusion Criteria

The study programs described in these books meet several criteria: they are from two weeks to one year in duration, they recur on a definable basis, and they are either intended for, or open to, non-U.S. citizens. The institute's advisory committee believed that these limitations would help to ensure that Specialized Study Options U.S.A. would provide the information of greatest use to foreign nationals, who would often have to travel long distances at substantial expense to participate in short-term training.

As in the earlier editions, English-language programs for foreign nationals have generally not been included, because they are fully described in another IIE publication, English Language and Orientation Programs in the United States. The only exceptions to this rule are courses in technical English, teaching English, and those devoted to literature, composition, or writing.

Programs in general clerical and secretarial skills, word processing, hairdressing, and cosmetology are also excluded, because of the numbers of programs involved and the wide availability of such training abroad. Nor do the books include programs geared to secondary school students, since the focus is on postsecondary courses of study for adults and professionals.

Survey Method

In preparing the 1986-88 edition, IIE surveyed approximately 24,000 institutional contacts, including the nearly 1,000 sponsors of programs listed in the previous editions.

Surveys for the earlier edition were largely targeted at the institutional level. Technical schools were surveyed in this manner again in 1986, because the high rate of response to previous surveys from National Association of Trade and Technical Schools (NATTS) member institutions demonstrated the effectiveness of this approach.

Responding to the needs of USIS educational advisers, the institute made a special effort to expand the number of entries of advanced short-term training opportunities. And, to this end, colleges and universities were surveyed differently in 1986 than in 1983 and 1984. In 1986, IIE surveyed at both the institutional and departmental levels in order to elicit as many responses from academic institutions as possible. The new approach was successful. Several hundred additional advanced study programs are listed in the 1986-88 edition than in the two earlier volumes combined.

The Institute made use of mailing lists or membership directories made available by the following educational and professional associations:

American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business
Association for Education in Journalism and Mass Communications
American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education
American Association of Teacher Educators in Agriculture
American Council on Education
American Economic Association
American Nurses Association
American Physical Therapy Association
American Psychological Association
American Society for Quality Control
American Society for Engineering Education
Association for Library and Information Science Education
Association of American Law Schools
Association of American Medical Colleges
Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture
Association of Collegiate Schools of Planning
Association of Independent Colleges and Schools
Association of Schools of Public Health
Association of University Programs in Health Administration
Council for Noncollegiate Continuing Education
Council on Social Work Education
Council on the Continuing Education Unit
National Association for Foreign Student Affairs
National Association of Schools of Public Affairs and Administration
National Association of Trade and Technical Schools
National Research Council
North American Association for Environmental Education
North American Association of Summer Sessions
Population Association of America
Society for Public Health Education
U.S. Department of Agriculture
University Film and Video Association

Some research resources, notably the National Research Council in the sciences and the U.S. Department of Agriculture in agriculture-related fields, were especially helpful in reaching academic departments and/or professional schools in several fields.

IIE also used its own reference resources to survey programs in: area studies, aviation, banking and finance, computer sciences, development education, executive education, hotel and restaurant management, international agriculture, international business, international education, nonprofit organization administration, publishing, and tourism.

Other Study Opportunities

Although IIE made every effort to cover all major fields of interest to foreign nationals in these books, some fields are less represented than others. This certainly does not mean that short-term study in these subjects does not exist in the United States.

Frequently, short-term training is too brief to meet our two-week minimum criterion for inclusion. Many fields abound in two- to four-day seminars and workshops designed to help professionals update and expand their knowledge. In other areas, short-term training is not available as recurring courses or seminars, but may be provided at national or regional conferences and may focus on different topics each year.

Corporations and professional associations often offer specialized training in their fields, although their programs are generally closed to individuals who are not employees or members of the organization. It may be worthwhile to investigate such offerings, however; exceptions can sometimes be made through special arrangement.

It may also be helpful to note that many organizations will develop special study programs for groups of foreign nationals, providing minimum participation requirements are met. Some of these study opportunities are listed in these guides, but many more are undoubtedly available.

Foreign nationals who wish to investigate the multitude of shorter—or longer—training opportunities available should consult the list of professional associations in the appendix at the back of this book. The information services of these organizations can often provide guidance on continuing education in a given field and a more complete picture of opportunities for short-term study in the United States today.

HOW TO USE THIS BOOK

This book is a compendium of short-term study programs offered by U.S. colleges, universities, trade and technical schools, and other organizations. Ranging in length from two weeks to one year, these programs are all open to non-U.S. students. Some study programs are, in fact, designed especially for students from other countries.

The information in the program listings was supplied by the sponsoring institutions, in response to a survey mailing conducted early in 1986. IIE has made every effort to organize and list this information accurately, in order to make this book as helpful as possible.

As you use this book, however, there are several points to bear in mind. In many cases, information had to be considerably abridged to fit our editorial style and space constraints. In other cases, circumstances may dictate changes in program information; some programs may be drastically altered or cancelled. At times, certain categories of information were not provided to us by the program sponsor; this is indicated in the text by the phrase "not given." It is also important to realize that IIE does not evaluate either the study programs listed here or the organizations that sponsor them.

For these reasons, we recommend that you use this book as a general guide to programs of study in the U.S. When you find a program that interests you, write directly to the sponsor for full, current information before you begin making travel arrangements. Better still, write to several program sponsors so that you will have a real basis to analyze and compare similar programs.

You will also find it helpful to read through this section thoroughly; it explains how the program listings are organized and the phrasing and terminology used in them.

Overall Organization of the Program Listings

The programs are arranged by fields of study. Each chapter is devoted to a specific subject, such as agriculture or business, with general programs in the field listed first. Programs that fall into a particular subfield are listed next. The chapters are arranged alphabetically by subject, as are the subsections of each chapter. Within each chapter section, the programs are listed alphabetically by the names of the sponsoring institutions.

Program Number, Sponsor Name, and Program Title

The top line of each listing gives the program number and the name of the sponsoring organization. Programs are numbered consecutively throughout each chapter. The number is preceded by a letter differentiating the programs in that chapter from those in other chapters.

The second line of each listing gives the program title, if any. This will not always appear, as some programs have no specific title.

Specialization

This section is used to describe the program more completely. It may indicate specific subjects taught in the program or features that the sponsor wishes to emphasize.

Dates

Some programs have specific beginning and ending dates that are similar each year. In other cases, we have provided the length of the program and approximate starting dates, e.g., "Six weeks: classes begin monthly."

The term "rolling" is frequently used; it indicates either that a program has frequent starting dates (weekly, for example) or that a student may enter the program at virtually any time.

Location

The city and state in which the program is held are given first; this may differ from the location of the sponsoring organization. Additional information indicates whether the program is held "on campus" (in a building owned/operated by the sponsor), at a "professional work site" (a workplace appropriate to the subject being studied, such as a farm, factory, or clinic), or at another location, such as a hotel conference room.

Instruction

Methods of instruction are listed first; these may include discussion groups or seminars, lectures, computer-assisted instruction, audiovisual media, independent study or tutorials, and a variety of other techniques.

The types of instructors who will be involved in teaching the courses are listed next. "Faculty" indicates regular or adjunct faculty of the host organization; they may be professors, instructors, teaching aides, or other types of teachers. "Guest speakers/lecturers" will usually mean professionals in the field being studied, who have been invited to discuss their particular work operations or techniques. The language of instruction is assumed to be English in all programs; if instruction is available in another language, this is stated in italics at the end of this section.

Highlights

The first item of information given here is the year the sponsor first offered this program. If the program is new, we have indicated when the sponsor first offered other short-term programs.

Next, we have indicated whether a certificate, diploma, degree, or other written documentation is awarded upon completion of the program.

If on-the-job training or internship is a regular part of the program, the statement "Practical training is a program component" will appear, followed by a statement as to whether participants receive payment for their work. If the internship is optional or not always available, the phrase "may be a program component" is used instead.

Then the type of certificate of eligibility issued for obtaining visas (I-20AB, I-20MN, or IAP-66) is listed, and whether foreign nationals on tourist visas are eligible to enroll.

Next, we have stated whether a foreign student counselor/adviser is available and what special support services are available to foreign nationals, if any.

The approximate number of participants or maximum enrollment in the specific program are listed next, along with the percentage of foreign enrollment in 1985.

Some sponsors will send a list of past participants if you request it, so that you may contact other students to find out what their experiences were. If such a list is available, this will be indicated as the last item in this section.

Eligibility

In this section, we have listed information regarding academic prerequisites, English language proficiency level, including any test scores specified by the sponsor, and the professional background required of applicants.

Cost

The total or partial cost of the program is given first, along with a list of the items included in the figure given: tuition, books and materials, meals, housing, local transportation, or health insurance. If all of these expenses are included, the term "inclusive" is used.

Following that, we have listed the availability of scholarships and whether they are full or partial.

Housing

If the sponsor provides housing for the participants of the program, the type of housing provided is given here. If housing is not provided, we have indicated whether the sponsor assists in locating housing or whether the student must make his own arrangements.

Application

The application deadline, if any, is given first. When a study program may be entered at virtually any time, the term "rolling" may be used; it generally means that, if eligible, you will be accepted for the next available class. The words "open" and "none" can indicate similar flexibility; they tend to mean that enrollments are accepted up to the beginning date of a course.

If a school requires an application fee, this is indicated next, along with information on whether the fee is refundable if you are not accepted into the program. Many schools also require a tuition and/or housing deposit along with the application; this information is NOT included in the listings.

Where there are scholarships available, the scholarship application deadline is also provided.

Contact

The specific person, office, or department to contact for information and application forms is the last item of information in each program listing. Telephone numbers, cable addresses, and telex numbers are supplied, if available.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

IIE does not review or evaluate the programs listed in this book. Inclusion of a program does not imply IIE approval, nor does omission imply IIE disapproval.

IIE does not handle requests for information or applications on any of these programs. You must contact the sponsoring organization directly for more information.

AGRICULTURE

A1 COLORADO STATE UNIVERSITY, INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL OF FORESTRY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Forestry and Natural Resources.

Specialization: Forestry, fishery, wildlife, range, watershed management, soil and water conservation, natural resource management.
Dates: Aug. 22–Dec. 15 and Jan. 15–May 11.
Location: Fort Collins, Colorado: on campus.
Instruction: Methods: lectures, discussion groups, field trips, independent study/research. By: faculty.

APPENDIX

PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATIONS

Specialized Study Options U.S.A. describes hundreds of short-term education and training programs available to foreign nationals. It does not exhaust the opportunities available for short-term training in the United States, however. Many professional associations conduct one- or two-day workshops and seminars as part of their annual national or regional conferences. Others offer continuing education programs of varying lengths for their members throughout the year.

Because the opportunities for very short-term training are so many and varied, it is best to contact these organizations directly for full information on their courses, conferences, and other study opportunities. The list below is a selection of 120 major professional associations, representing a variety of educational and professional fields. If you do not find an association in your chosen field, consult the annual Encyclopedia of Associations, published by Gale Research Company, Book Tower, Detroit, Michigan 48226, for complete information about virtually all U.S. professional associations.

SPECIALIZED STUDY OPTIONS U.S.A. 1986/88

Volume 2: Professional Development

This book provides information on nearly 500 short-term professional development programs in the United States — programs offered by U.S. universities, professional associations and organizations, which require at least two years of college or a university degree as a requirement for admission.

Use this guide to identify the right program for you from among opportunities in all major fields of study. Concise descriptions provide the information you need on costs, course offerings, application and deadlines, and services for international students and professionals. Programs range from two weeks to one year in length.

The Institute of International Education, the largest U.S. higher educational exchange agency, has published guides to international study for over 60 years. IIE is a nonprofit organization with over 500 member U.S. colleges and universities.
